We were startled by the announcement of the death Sunday, about 1 p. m., of Mr. Charley Gillum, an old citizen whom we knew, in the days long gone, as a prominent feature in the camp-meeting scenes at "Gillum's camp grounds." We had a chat with him the last time we saw him in town, and thought he might live many years. He was sick only a few days, and we are informed declined taking medicine, not apprehending serious results. Ille disease was pneumonia.

Mr. George Fleener, of near Falmouth, was here Saturday. He invited us to come down and enjoy a hunting and fishing frolic next fall when the ducks are ripe and the firmy tribes abound. We had a pleasant chat about matters and things in general, and just as we ventured on a particular recollection of him on a particular occasion, when we were a boy, he-winked, and suddenly turned the subjec to a salivary-gland exciting (a very different excitement from the other) description of how he and a friend down on the bottom split open the backs of a dozen ducks and squirrels, barbecaed them over a trench fire and ate every one!
